The Case of Mme. Dumont.

(Original.)

Two gentlemen sat chatting in a garden inclosed in one of those high walls with which the antebellum people of New Orleans were used to surround the rear parts of their dwellings. Fabian Marchand had just returned from Paris and was telling his friend, Edgar Brossian, of the French capital.

"I saw there," he said, "a very beautiful woman, Mme. Dumont. Though she was middle aged, she had more attention than most of the young girls. But there was a special reason for this besides her beauty."

"Certainly it could not have been a discreditable reason," Mme. Dumont has lived in New Orleans, and we never had a more respected woman in society here."

"What she may have been here I do not know; what she is in Paris I do know. If she had a good reputation, she has lost it."

A smothered exclamation came from an upper window of a house extending back into an adjoining garden. Both men looked up. A young man about twenty years old was staring down upon them with an expression of horror. For a moment his eyes were fixed on Marchand; then he disappeared from the window.

"Great heavens!" cried Brossian.

"What is it?" asked the other eagerly.

"Who is he?"

"Ernest Dumont."

"A relative?"

"Her son. Let us go in."

"No! I will wait here. In addition to the pain I have given him, I will not put him to the trouble of hunting for me."

The men had not long to wait. An intimate friend of young Dumont was in the same house with him, and presently this friend came into the garden through a front gate and back toward where Marchand and Brossian were sitting. He presented his card, bearing the name Sidney Mason, and said:

"I am the bearer of a message from Ernest Dumont to—He looked from the one to the other.

"Mr. Marchand drew a card and handed it to him. 'This is Mr. Brossian. You will represent me, Brossian, will you not?'"

Brossian assented, and Marchand withdrew. Brossian chatted a long while with the young man in the hope that amends might be made. But in such a case amends are impossible. A meeting between the two principals was arranged for the next morning in a wood above the city on the Mississippi river.

Marchand, as the challenged party, had the choice of terms. He chose pistols, the two principals to be stationed fifty paces apart, then to advance, firing at will. At the meeting when the word was given to advance and fire Marchand stood still. He never raised his pistol. Dumont, white as a sheet, advanced firing, but sent three bullets at his mother's traducer before hitting him. On being struck Marchand fell, dangerously wounded. Then both parties left the field.

For a long while Marchand hung between life and death. Then he recovered. As soon as he was able to stand he sent word to Dumont that he was able and ready to give him further satisfaction. Dumont asked if his enemy would fight or stand up to be killed, and when informed that he would act as before the matter was dropped. Then Marchand left New Orleans to go no one knew where.

The cause of the duel was kept secret. Sympathy went with Marchand, who was universally beloved. It was considered that it was a case of the hot blood of youth touching upon the good sense, forbearance, of middle age.

Young Dumont shut himself up from society, and it was generally believed that the blame attached to his action was killing him. It was not that. It was a doubt that Marchand's words were false, a doubt that when it once fastened itself upon the son's brain he could not shake it off.

One day—it was some months after Marchand's departure—Dumont received a note from his mother, who was a widow, that she was in New Orleans and wished him to come to her. For time he refused, but since she was gently persistent he finally consented to an interview. When he was ushered into the room where his mother received him he was astonished to see Marchand with her.

"The tables are turned," said Marchand. "I am now your mother's defender. There were two Mme. Dumonts in Paris. I did not know that there was but one. I have made every reparation in my power."

"Is this to comfort me, or is it the truth?" asked the young man, trembling.

"That I have perfect confidence in your mother's purity I ask your consent that she shall become my wife."

The young man stood staring at the pair. Mme. Dumont made no motion. Presently her son staggered forward, and she caught him in her arms.

Fabian Marchand as soon as he had recovered from his wound and further satisfaction had been declined had started for Paris with a view to hunting for evidence that Mme. Dumont was not so bad as she was painted. He found that the Mme. Dumont he had referred to was infamous, but discovered that there was another Mme. Dumont in Paris, a lady much esteemed.

Both women had lived in New Orleans; hence the mistake. This lady's acquaintance had made without revealing himself and fell in love with her. Finally he confessed the part he had taken, of which she unknowingly had been the cause.

Marchand and his stepson became inseparable. TURNER C. HOYLE.

An Amateur Thief.

(Original.)

Two friends, Wallace Yost and Clinton Palmer, were discussing the blunders made by criminals in covering their tracks. Yost was speaking.

"I tell you the criminal from the moment he becomes a criminal has not a normal control of his faculties."

"He should have a far keener control of them than before. Had I committed a crime my faculties would be sharp as a razor."

"I should like to have that statement tested."

"It is possible. Make it worth my while, and I will commit a crime."

"What do you mean?"

Palmer thought awhile before replying. "I will bet you $1,000 to $10,000 that I can steal $10,000 and not be detected for, say, a year. I will take the money from the safe of my employer, to which I and others have access. The money can be returned anonymously at the end of the year with interest."

"The conditions will not be criminal."

If you are arrested, I can come forward and claim that it is merely a wager."

"That would not be evidence. Any thief could get some friend to put in such a claim for him."

"I believe you're right. So far as being considered a criminal is concerned, there would be no hope for you."

The bet was made, and Palmer the next day during business hours while the office was crowded, walked deliberately into the safe, which stood open, put a package of bills in his side coat pocket, went and sat down at his desk, remained there till the hour of closing, then went out in company with a member of the firm. Going to his room, he sat down to think over what he should do with the money. His brain was clear, and he was pleased to discover that he had perfect control of his faculties. There had been so many people in the office at the time the money was taken, the safe standing open the while, that there was no reason why he should be suspected any more than others. Nevertheless all the office forces would be placed under surveillance. A detective would be employed, whose eye would be open to the slightest clew. Palmer's room might be searched when he was absent, so he could not leave the money there. He dared not keep it on his person. He dared not put it in bank. He must get rid of it.

Here was a risk that he was forced to take. If he were seen hiding the money, it would be discovered in any place that would incriminate him, the name would be up. However, he believed that the risk would be infinitesimal, and he spent several hours making plans for the disposition of the funds. The theft had not been discovered before the closing hours of business, and could not possibly be discovered till the beginning of business hours the next day. He could certainly not be watched till then, if at all. After dinner he went to his grandmother's, who lived a few miles out in the country, and when it was dark and no one noticed him he strolled back of the house. Taking a spade from the barn, he went a few hundred yards to a wood. There under a tree he knew well—he had often climbed it when a boy—he buried the bills in a cigar box. He felt now that the rest would be easy. He would go to the office, as usual, in the morning feeling sure that the theft could not be traced to him. All he had to do was to act naturally. He slept fairly well and at 9 o'clock in the morning entered the office. The employees were coming in, and one of the partners, Mr. Knox, was already there. Palmer cast a quick glance about him and saw that all was as usual. He sat down at his desk and tried to lose himself in his work. But he couldn't. He dreaded the moment when the money would be missed. Then he began to wish the discovery would be made and his suspense ended. About 11 o'clock the cashier went into the safe and soon returned with a serious look on his face. Going to the head of the firm, Mr. Devlin, he whispered something into his ear. The gentleman arose and went to the safe with the cashier. Both entered, and both came out together, the head of the firm taking in with a searching glance every man in the office.

Palmer's heart was beating like a kettledrum, and he felt the blood leaving his face. Should he look at his employer or keep his eyes on his work? He had with enough left to choose the latter course, but he felt that the eye of his employer was on him, and to look unconcerned was out of the question.

"Mr. Palmer, will you step into my private office?"

Palmer knew that the first part of his game had gone against him, but he was plucky. Indeed, he had to be plucky and nerved himself for a struggle as to the remaining part. He denied any knowledge of the theft and explained his palor on the ground that he was not well. Mr. Devlin pretended at least to be convinced of his innocence and sent him back to work.

That's the last Palmer heard of the matter. He could have borne the strain better had he heard more. For weeks he endured the tortures of the damned and when he could endure it no longer went to his aunt's, dug up the money and, going to Mr. Devlin, laid it on his desk.

Palmer, having returned the money, was not prosecuted. The circumstances of the bet were given out, but made little impression. Palmer went forth with the mark of Cain upon him and died in a few years of the obloquy under which he lived.

She Flew Too High.

(Original.)

A link of a hundred miles had been completed in one of the great railroad routes in the far west, and news came from the east that the son of the railroad king who was chiefly interested was coming to attend the opening festivities. It leaked out that the boy, Morris Morse, was a high roller, spent money like water and was especially the victim of any adventures who could get hold of him. But it did not leak out that his father had directed the man in charge at the point where the celebration was to be held to keep watch of his son, threatening that if any one got the better of him some one's head would come off.

Now, it happened that Kate Finch, the belle of all that region, heard the first part of the story and made up her mind to snare the young heir to some of the money that was so plentifully heaped upon her father's railroad workmen, but her ambition had carried her far beyond so menial a pursuit. She had joined a troupe of barnstormers and distinguished herself for her aptitude in playing the part of a highborn dame. Where she picked up the manners she had never seen no one knew. The fact was attributed to a nervous nervousness. Her prof. she turned into raiment, and, relying on an exceptionally pretty face, a fine figure, with the sharpest, all adorned by silks, satins and feathers, she resolved to conquer a fortune. Surely the coming of young Morse was her opportunity.

When the Morse private car reached the eastern end of the newly finished link, Kate, arrayed in all her finery, stepped on the platform. It was not long before she saw a young man at the window who, the moment he saw her, smiled at her and in a few minutes appeared in the vestibule, smiling again and receiving ample encouragement, went out and joined the fascinating Catherine. Women in the far west, the best of them, are by no means so conventional as in the east, and the man Kate had become excellent friends. Meanwhile an excursion train was being made up, and before it started the gentleman invited Miss Finch to go with the excursionists and in his own private car.

All of this was witnessed by a railroad official who seemed greatly perturbed. He took the young man away from the car and whispered something into his ear. Going to his room, he sat down to think over what he should do with the money. His brain was clear, and he was pleased to discover that he had perfect control of his faculties. There had been so many people in the office at the time the money was taken, the safe standing open the while, that there was no reason why he should be suspected any more than others. ## RAISING CHURCH FUNDS.

The Kaffirs Mix in a Lot of Fun With Their Generosity.

The gentle Kaffir when he does become Christianized has his own ideas of the best method of raising funds for the support of the "cause." From the subjoined description of a native meeting sent home by a missionary it would appear that native generosity, although of a rough and tumble character, is distinctly productive of ways and means:

"Recently I attended a native tea meeting, at which more than 125 were raised by the very poor congregation. Their way of doing it was characteristic and amusing. They paid 2 shillings to sit down to tea. Then some one would pay 3 shillings for such and such a man to be required to get up again and leave the table. The man thus assailed would pay 3s. 6d. for leave to sit down again. There was a special table at which six could sit, paying an extra shilling each for privileges. They had just got seated when a man paid 7 shillings to clear them out, and they paid another 8 shillings to sit on, and so it went on. They arranged all this themselves, and this is their way of giving to the cause. One man had a tin of sirup. He said he would pay 2 shillings to pour it over another man's head who had got himself up in a large collar, etc.; this man paid 3 shillings to be let off, the first man 4 shillings again to do it, the other 5 shillings to escape, the first 6 shillings to do it—and did it, and oh, the laughter and the mess!"

The Most Polite Man.

The most polite man has been found in Robert Wilder of Clarksburg, W. Va. He has never been known to say a cross word to anybody, and he is respected highly by his relatives, which is saying a great deal.

When Wilder was held up by a highwayman near Dugan's dam, Mr. Wilder handed over $13.25 and apologized for not having more with him. Wilder smiles when a person tramps on his corn and congratulates his wife on her discernment when she calls him names. Taken ill one day, he insisted upon telephoning the undertaker, expressing regret at the trouble he might cause him.—Philadelphia North American.

Growing Tea in United States.

At present the American Tea Growing company has 130 acres of tea under cultivation at Tea, near Rantowles, S. C. Of this number sixty acres are planted with tea bearing plants. Fully 200 pounds to the acre are produced. It is the plan to increase the acreage under cultivation by about thirty acres a year until there are 500 acres of tea growing, which will mean that between 100,000 and 200,000 pounds of tea will be produced in South Carolina each year by 1914.

Birds' Wages.

In the garden there are a thousand small offenders that he who tills the soil for pleasure would willingly forgive. If it be granted that the thrush and the blackbird steal a certain amount of fruit, still their presence is so beautiful and their song so sweet that what they take may gladly be accorded as wages.—Country Life.

Practical Training.

"Deduction is the thing," declared the law student. "For instance, yonder in our yard is a pile of ashes. That is evidence that we have had fires this winter."

"And, by the way, John," broke in his father, "you might go out and sift that evidence."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

COMMON SENSE

Leads most intelligent people to use only medicines of known composition. Therefore it is that Dr. Pierce's medicines, the makers of which print every ingredient entering into them upon the bottle wrappers and attest its correctness under oath, are daily growing in favor. The composition of Dr. Pierce's medicines is open to everybody. Dr. Pierce being desirous of having the search light of investigation turned fully upon his formula, being confident that the better the composition of these medicines is known the more will their great curative merits be recognized. Being wholly made of the active medicinal principles extracted from native forest roots, by exact processes original with Dr. Pierce, and without the use of a drop of alcohol, triple-refined and chemically pure glycerine being used instead in extracting and preserving the curative virtues residing in the roots employed, these medicines are entirely free from the objection of doing harm by creating an appetite for either alcoholic beverages or habit-forming drugs. Examine the formula on their bottle wrappers, and as sworn to by Dr. Pierce, and you will find that his "Golden Medical Discovery," the great blood-purifier, stomach tonic and bowel regulator—the medicine which, while not recommended to cure consumption in its advanced stages (no medicine will do that) yet does cure all those catarrhal conditions of head and throat, weak stomach, torpid liver and bronchial troubles, weak lungs and haemorrhoids, which, if neglected or badly treated lead up to and finally terminate in consumption.

Take the "Golden Medical Discovery" in time and it is not likely to disappoint you if only you give it a thorough and fair trial. Don't expect miracles. It won't do supernatural things. You must exercise your patience and persevere in its use for a reasonable length of time to get its full benefits. The ingredients of which Dr. Pierce's medicines are composed have the unequalled endorsement of scores of medical leaders—better than any amount of lay, or non-professional, testimonials. They are not given away to be experimented with but are sold by all dealers in medicines at reasonable prices.

On Topics Current.

SANTA ROSA is often referred to and called Burbank City since the wizard has become famous for his success as a grower and originator of rare plants and fruits. The whole county is proud of Mr. Burbank, for through him we have become widely known and advertised, for it is on our lands that his wonderful work has been carried on and attended with such wondrous results. A county that will serve as an experiment station for such work has commended itself as a desirable place to farm and live in, so Sonoma county, thanks to Mr. Burbank, has been called to the attention of the entire world. We would suggest, however, to our neighbor, Santa Rosa, that she preserve her fair title, the City of Roses, and have the name of Burbank ever associated with it but never absorbed by it.

REST ROOMS are being advocated as waiting and lounging places for tired women whose husbands are attending to business in town or having a cigar with friends. It does seem that the farmer's wife should not have to sit in the wagon or roam the streets, and yet where women would gather to while away the time there is the danger of gossip among them and better far no rest rooms if they are to become gossip factories. This would be the particular objection to these places in small towns. When women congregate at clubs and societies gossip is eliminated because of the amount of business programed, but with nothing to do there is danger that the women at the rest room would be coquetting with the chief author of all mischief, idleness, and tale-bearing would ensue.

THE ARTISTIC side of our nation is being developed with a pleasing rapidity. Not only in the arts proper is this evident but in the domestic arts, and much stress is laid now days upon making the home beautiful. Magazines all contain a department or reference to matters of this kind for there is a growing demand for suggestions that will serve to beautify our surroundings. Nothing could be more satisfactory than this home improvement for in the home all our tastes are fostered and developed. It will lead ultimately to more civic beauties and more attention to the arts in general for boys brought up in bright, cheery, artistic homes, however humble, will come to be ideal citizens and good politicians.

THE ORIENTAL parade which took place on our national holiday at Oakland seemed strangely out of place for such an occasion. It was spectacular and entertaining but in no wise appropriate or fitting. The hisses which greeted the Japanese contingent were, however, most uncalled for since these people had been invited to participate and should, therefore, been respected in the capacity of guests.

Official Paper of Sonoma.

STILL HAS FIGHTING CHANCE TO LIVE.

Mrs. Henry, Who Was All But Roasted to Death, Still Alive—Her Vitality is Remarkable.

Mrs. Henry, whose clothes caught fire on Broadway on the afternoon of the Fourth of July, remarkable to relate, is still alive. She lies at Green's Sanitarium, on Broadway, under the care of Dr. Thomson, hovering between life and death. Her body, from the chest down, is frightfully burned. The burns cover almost two-thirds of the woman's body and many of them are deep, but for all that her physician still has hopes of saving her life. It now transpires that Mrs. Valquaden, opposite whose house the dreadful accident happened, rushed to the assistance of the burning and prostrate woman, and throwing a blanket over her smothered the flames, being assisted by the father and husband of Mrs. Henry, in her heroic rescue. All three had their hands and arms more or less burned.

BRIEF MENTION

Hunting notices at this office. Subscribe for the Index-Tribune. Do it now.

Daunt does the only reliable watch repairing.

Hunting notices printed at this office. The very latest form.

The volunteer hay crop on the Jones ranch has turned out fine.

The Daily Chronicle and Index-Tribune only $9 for the two newspapers.

Any repair work left at Mrs. Lutgen's will receive prompt attention by Daunt.

Now is the time to lay concrete sidewalks. See Trudgen, the stone mason, about it.

Hay is about over in this valley. Contrary to expectations early in the season the hay crop is a large and profitable one.

Jones & Pettigrew, the fruit commission merchants of San Francisco, have been buying up considerable fruit in this valley the present season. The firm is one of the oldest and most reliable of the commission houses of the metropolis.

Fruit of all kinds is commanding high prices this season and in consequence our orchardists will bank money this year. Peaches, pears, apples and even the despised prune are commanding from $25 to $45 per ton.

The supply of hunting badges has given out, and all who send money to the County Clerk are receiving in return a receipt, which will answer for the badge until a new supply arrives. Six hundred badges have issued in Sonoma county.

Deputy County Clerk Jack Ford was in town Sunday shaking hands with his friends here who are legion. He brought with him a number of hunters license tags and did quite a land office business disposing of the same to local nimrods. This was a great accommodation to many of our people who desired the tags but had not the time to journey to Santa Rosa to secure them.

Attended Meeting of Eagles in Santa Rosa.

A. Beretta, S. Cincin, O. Vanucci and Wm. V. Chase, of the Fraternal Order of Eagles, attended a meeting of the Santa Rosa Arie, last night. They made the trip to the City of Roses in George Lowell's Locomobile.

ELECTRIC RAILWAY TALK AGAIN REVIVED.

Vallejo and Napa Valley Road to Connect With Sonoma, Glen Ellen, Kenwood and Santa Rosa.

The granting, by the Board of Supervisors of this county, last week of an electric power franchise to Frank M. Burris, President of the Sonoma Valley Bank, has again revived electric railway talk in the valley. The franchise was bid in by Mr. Burris, who is said to represent the Eel River Power Company, which is rapidly pushing forward to completion their power house, and will soon invade the territory now supplied with "juice" by the Bay Counties Power Company. The Eel river company's plant will be capable of transmitting a tremendous amount of electric power throughout the counties of Lake, Mendocino, Sonoma, Napa and Marin counties. The introduction of that power down this way is bound to be followed by great activity in electric railway circles.

General Manager E. J. Perry of the Vallejo and Napa Valley electric Railway, has given out for publication that his company will tap Sonoma county within a year and will run through Sonoma, Glen Ellen, Kenwood and thence to Santa Rosa.

Manager Perry says that eight new cars of improved type and 900 tons of steel rails are expected from the East within a few weeks for the extension of the line. The new cars will be 58 feet long, fitted with plate glass observation windows, and will have water coolers, dressing and smoking rooms.

The road between Vallejo and Napa has made an immense profit during the two years it has been in operation and has just awarded contracts for the extension above Napa to J. W. Thurber, a Los Angeles contractor.

That Condemnation Suit.

Judge Seawell has rendered an opinion in the condemnation suit brought by Sonoma county against the Yulupa Land and Water Company, the Biggin heirs and others. The land sought to be condemned was for a right of way for a public road on the west side of the valley over the lands of the non-consenting land owners mentioned above. Judge Seawell in deciding the case gives the county judgment of condemnation and awards the Yulupa Company $42.80 for the land taken and damages in the sum of $57.20 for the land not taken. The Biggin heirs were given $26.40 for the land taken and damages in the sum of $55.60. The Court also finds that the sum of $250 will be needed to build the fence required. The $100 award made by the Court to the Yulupa Company is a similar amount to that awarded by the viewers. The Court in his opinion calls attention to the diversity of opinion regarding the value of the land.

Schooner "Four Sisters" Sold.

The schooner "Four Sisters" has been sold by Mrs. Anna F. Hauto, administratrix of the estate of the late P. J. Hauto. The purchaser is Captain Larkin of Alameda, who paid $2,000 cash for a half interest in the boat. The craft was built by Capt. Hauto several years ago and was used by the Captain in the freight business between San Francisco and Sonoma Valley towns.

Hood's Sarsaparilla which contains the best and safest curative substances.

In usual liquid form or in chocolate tablets known as Sarsatabs. 100 doses $1.

The Grape Crop.

J. Bethune of the Mount Pisgah vineyards, comprising several hundred acres, reports that the grape crop has not looked so promising in this valley in years as at present. The yield of wine grapes promises to be above the average, and as the acreage is far below what it was before our vineyards were decimated by the phylloxera ten or twelve years ago, and the demand for California wines is constantly increasing, the price, too, will be all right this season.

CITY TRUSTEES AND THE JULY MEETING.

Ordinance Introduced Raising Liquor License—Usual Monthly Bills Allowed—Other Matters.

The Board of City Trustees met in adjourned session last Saturday evening to transact the business of the July meeting.

A full Board was present, Trustee Hotz, the presiding officer, in the chair.

The minutes of the several meetings held last month and that held on the first Wednesday in July having been read by Clerk Small and approved by the Trustees, the following bills were allowed and ordered paid:

F. W. Bean, rep. Bear Flag Pole	$20 00
Wm. Trudgen, work in cemetery	80 00
Mrs. L. V. Enman, water	15 00
Valenti Calzasta, labor	14 00
A. Pinelli, sprinkling streets	46 87
Jas. H. Albertson, sal. and dep. sal.	26 00
E. Gufanti, labor	12 00
Mrs. J. A. Poppe, mds	2 91
Wm. J. Meyer, labor and material	2 85
Wm. Chelaso, labor	2 00
Wm. Green est., lumber and labor	30 80
H. Castagosa, sprinkling streets	27 50
Sonoma Val. Co., electric light	36 40
Howard Mumfry, labor	1 50

The bill of Henshaw & Bulky for $484.50 for furnishing the city an Austin sprinkling cart was laid over until the next meeting.

The contract with the Sonoma Valley Company for lighting the streets was renewed for the month of July.

Ordinance No. 90 was introduced by Trustee Wagon, and receiving a second from Trustee Bates, was read the first and second times, and at the August meeting will be put on its final passage. This ordinance raises the saloon license in this city to $30 per quarter, payable one year in advance and if carried at the next meeting of the Board will take effect immediately. It is said to have the support of Trustees Hotz, Wagon and Bates. Trustee Breitenbach is said to be opposed to specious legislation against the hotel and saloon men of the town and if the license is raised on them wants the license of the merchants raised also. When put upon its final passage the ordinance will no doubt be productive of much vivid oratory. After reading the proposed ordinance the second time, on motion of Trustee McDonell, seconded by Trustee Breitenbach, the Board adjourned.

A Public Read that Needs Attention.

Now that the fruit shipping season is at hand, the county road leading from Schellville to Capt. Schell's landing at the head of Schell's slough, ought to be graded and put in shape for the farmers who desire to avail themselves of the schooner service of the Sonoma Valley Transportation Company.

City Funds on Hand.

At the meeting of the City Trustees, held last Saturday evening, Clerk Small reported the following funds on hand:

City Hall Fund	$15,400 00
Bond and Interest	850 45
Furniture and Equipment	327 34
General Fund	1,387 13
Total	$17,965 92

A Good Result.

Under the operation of the new Pure Food Laws, baking powders now generally bear on the labels a statement of the ingredients. This is of utmost importance because of the harmful ingredients used in many cases.

Royal Baking Powder is known to be the only baking powder made of Royal Grape Cream of Tartar, and this no doubt explains its greatly increased sale here.

Careful housekeepers are taking advantage of the protection which the Laws afford, and are examining all the reading matter on the back of the label before adopting any brand for use in the home.

When in place of the words "Cream of Tartar" the words "alum," "aluminum" or "phosphate of lime" appear among the ingredients, they heed the warning and avoid baking powders containing these substitutes.

Saloon License Revoked.

The Board of Supervisors on Wednesday last revoked the saloon license of A. F. Wilson, who conducts a road house at Melitta. The Supervisors revoked the license on complaint of a number of the residents of Melitta, who alleged that the resort was a disorderly and disreputable place. Thirteen witnesses, were examined by the Board, who testified against the resort while five witnesses thought the resort all right.

Secured Marriage License.

A license to wed was issued Wednesday to Arthur Tapin Skinner, aged 26 and Miss Lucinda McElroy, aged 19. The wedding takes place to-morrow at the home of the bride's parents on Broadway.

Mr. Bishop and family, who were camping on the Trowbridge place, have returned to their home in Berkeley.

A jolly crowd assembled at the Weise home last Saturday evening to give J. Harry Weise a surprise party on the return of his birthday.

A party of young people returned from a camping trip to the Geysers a few days ago. They tell of the number of rattlers that were killed by the boys and the wonderful sights they saw.

A woodchopper set fire to some brush on a place about one mile from town, last Saturday evening, to the great alarm of the people in the vicinity who thought it could not be checked. As luck would have it there was no wind and no damage resulted. The person who burns brush at this season of the year breaks the law however, whether the burning is done on his own place or not.

The Indian soap-root which grows in the hills is now in blossom. The flowers are white and very delicate. They remain closed until about 4 o'clock p. m. As soon as they open the honey bees set to work to secure the nectar they contain. Besides this plant there is now in blossom the tall white sage and a shrub called the holly berry bush from both of which the bees gather honey.

The Cowboy Artist.

[Original.]
Mr. Beverly Farnham, a wealthy New Yorker, desiring to inspect the agricultural and cattle growing regions of the great far west, took his daughter Emily for a companion and set out on his trip. This same Emily was a beauty, an artistic beauty, if the expression may be allowed, with Titan hair and dark eyes—in other words, a mingling of the blond and brunette. Mr. and Miss Farnham were welcome at the ranch houses, with which the country was dotted, and spent their time riding over the country from one of them to another. The father looked upon the region simply as one in which to raise food for the hungry millions in the east. The daughter considered it very picturesque.

One morning the visitors were riding over the broad acres of a cattle ranch when they met a cowboy. He was long and slender, and his face was handsome, with a dreamy expression. Instead of riding past them with a blank stare the young man raised his hat and bade them good morning. His eyes were riveted on Miss Emily, with whose appearance he seemed very much struck. When he had passed out of hearing, she remarked to her father: "Isn't it strange, papa, that we have to come so far away from home to learn manners?"

"Manners? What do you mean?" "That young man bade us good morning politely. If we had met a gentleman in the country about New York, he would not have been so polite."

"H'm! I don't see what business he had to speak to us at all." "That evening at the ranch house after supper Mr. Farnham was notified that a man wished to see him at the porch. The New Yorker went out to find the cowboy he had passed in the morning sitting in his saddle, rolling a cigarette on the pomel.

"I've called, sir," he said, "to ask if you will allow me to paint the young lady who was with you this morning—your daughter, I believe." "Paint my daughter! Certainly not."

The reply was given so curtly that almost before it was out the cowboy had put spurs to his horse and dashed away. The dialogue had been short and to the point.

Mr. Farnham asked who his visitor was and was told that he was Ellery Olmstead, commonly known as the cowboy artist, since he painted cattle and painted pictures. No one seemed to know or care much about his antecedents, but some one had heard that he had come from the east, where he had been a student in an art school, his object in coming being health.

The next day when Mr. and Miss Farnham were out for their usual ride they met a masked man who halted them, calling upon the father to throw up his hands. The order was obeyed, but upon the assurance that he was not armed the gentleman was permitted to lower them. Then he took out his pocketbook, but was ordered to put it back. Not far distant was a dilapidated barn that had not been used for years. To this the masked man drove father and daughter, then ordered them to dismount. Within was an ensel on which rested a canvas, while paints, palette and brushes lay near. The captor asked Mr. Farnham to dismount and gave him a camp stool. Then, assisting the young lady from her horse, he posed her to suit his fancy. Divining his purpose, she seemed not only willing, but pleased with the outcome of the adventure.

Meanwhile he had removed his mask and revealed himself as the cowboy artist, and as soon as the posing was accomplished he began to sketch. The sitting lasted for more than an hour, and when it was finished the artist assisted his captives to mount. "I am curious," said Emily Farnham, "to see how the picture will turn out."

"I have only caught an inspiration for a fancy picture," said the young man. "If you wish it to be yourself you must give me other sittings."

How Emily was over her father is not known, but the next day the two appeared at the barn and came afterward for a number of sittings. The picture grew into a thing of beauty, and the model was delighted with it. Then Mr. Farnham, who had been so outraged by his compulsory treatment as to discover no beauty in the painting, at last, seeing his daughter looking at him from the canvas with an intensified beauty, began to covet the portrait.

"H'm!" he said to the artist. "How much would you sell it for?" "Road agents are not used to selling their plunder to those they plunder," was the reply.

"This case may be an exception," said the father. "The picture is not for sale, but if your daughter will forgive me for painting it from compulsory sittings I shall be pleased to present it to you." The young lady would have gladly acceded to the terms, but her father would not permit and left the country without the portrait.

The next winter the painting was exhibited in New York and attracted great attention. The cowboy received orders and remained east just long enough to persuade Miss Farnham that she could not get along without him. Her father was compelled to accept the portrait he had coveted in lieu of his daughter, who returned to ranch land with the artist. There he painted many pictures, which found a ready sale both in America and abroad. His "Sunset on the Prairie," an Indian girl shading her eyes with her hand to look over the broad landscape, was hung in the Paris salon and created a sensation. The artist's wife was his model.

The Doctor Away from Home When Most Needed.

People are often very much disappointed to find that their family physician is away from home when they most need his services. Diseases like cholera, colic and cholera morbus require prompt treatment, and have in many instances proven fatal before medicine could be procured or a physician summoned. The right way is to keep at hand a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. No physician can prescribe a better medicine for these diseases. By having it in the house you escape much pain and suffering and all risk. Buy it now; it may save life.

Galliano's Quinine Hair Tonic.

Joe Galliano, at First Street East, Pinelli building, has introduced into Sonoma a hair tonic called Quinine Tonic, which is a wonderful remedy for the prevention of baldness. Mr. Galliano has had many years experience under a first-class physician in Europe. A great number of cases of baldness are caused by indigestion, and not as is presumed, by a disease of the scalp. It is not claimed that Quinine Tonic will grow hair on a bald head, as a number of fake tonics are advertised to do, but it is claimed and guaranteed that Quinine Tonic will stop the hair from falling out, and if used twice a week will clear the head from dandruff which will not return as long as the tonic is used. Quinine Tonic is composed of the five following articles: Pure Alcohol, Quinine, Sulphur, Glycerine and Turmeric. If the Tonic is used and not found as represented, Galliano will refund the money. The Quinine Tonic will also save the trouble of shampooing the hair. This Tonic is for sale at both drug stores in Sonoma.

The Strange Detective.

[Original.]

I had married a wife and found that I had been mistaken in her. Marriage to me had meant perfect accord. Perfect accord had not been the result in my case, and I resolved to cut the knot that bound me to Della by going away from her. I had no intention of leaving her to support herself. I would give her the lion's share of my income and supply any need for which this share was inadequate. It was near midnight after a quarrel that I came to this decision.

Opening my front door, I went out. It was dark and uninviting. Here and there a street lamp flickered, and an occasional vehicle rumbled on the pavement. Few were abroad, and to avoid even these I turned down an unfrequented street. My cheeks were burning, and the night air could not cool them. I took no thought as to where I would go. Indeed, I had no desire to go anywhere. I wished only to walk and be alone.

I heard footsteps beside me and turned my head to discover who had thus taken it upon himself to intrude upon me. I saw no one.

"Ah, I see," I muttered. "It's the echo."

I was walking by a high brick wall and attributed what I had heard to the sound of my own footsteps sent back from it. But when I passed beyond it to an opening between the houses I still heard it. Again I turned to see if any one was beside me.

This time I was surprised—indeed, so much surprised that my attention was drawn momentarily from my troubles. I saw a figure the counterpart of myself. He was myself in every respect except that he wore a very disagreeable expression. I stopped and stood still. He did the same. I moved on. He moved on too. I concluded to speak to him.

"Where are you going?" I asked. "Where are you going?" he replied. "I don't care where I go."

"So long as you get your revenge, I suppose."

"Revenge! Revenge on whom?" "Your wife."

I thought a moment. Could it be possible that what I did was influenced by a desire to hurt Della. "My wife will not trouble herself about my leaving her so long as she is provided for."

"Better than that, she won't sleep a wink all night."

"Do you think so?" "I know so. It will serve her right. She has treated you shamefully."

I had considered that Della had treated me shamefully, but preferred to be the only one to accuse her. Now that this disagreeable counterpart of myself did so I revolted.

"Can you name any one thing," I asked, irritated, "in which she has treated me shamefully?"

"Yes; she married you for one thing and found you badly in everything."

"She disappointed in me? Why, it's I who am disappointed in her."

"And you have a right to be. You were looking for a woman with a disposition that nothing can ruffle. You knew that you were quick spoken and often unjust. You wanted some one to bear with you. You didn't get it."

"No, I didn't get it; you're right there. But was I justified in expecting all that?"

"You married for it, and since you have been disappointed you are right in resuming your former status."

"But I don't like the idea of Della lying awake."

"You have to expect that."

"That doesn't help the matter."

"Better go back and comfort her."

"Who are you anyway? You have been telling me that I should be satisfied with what I've got. Now you turn about and tell me to go and comfort her."

"It wouldn't do any good for me to tell you who I am. You wouldn't recognize me any better for the telling. But, if you wish to know, I'm your conscience."

"Now I know you're lying. Conscience doesn't go about telling people who have done wrong that they've done right. It tells them that they've done wrong from first to last."

My other self chuckled. "Conscience," he said, "isn't always like that. Conscience uses all sorts of means to right people. Often he is a detective, hunting for a clue whereby we are to be convinced of our wrongdoing. In these cases he plays parts, wears disguises, just like a real detective. If he went at a wrongdoer fair and square, he would accomplish nothing."

"What would you advise me to do?" "Stop making a fool of yourself."

"That means?" "Go home. You'll find your wife in tears. Tell her you're sorry and all that."

"Will she tell me she's sorry?" "You won't care whether she does or not."

I turned and began to walk home slowly. I forgot all about my other self and neither heard nor saw anything more of him. As I proceeded I went faster all I ran. When I got to the house, I went up the stairs three at a time. Della was lying on a lounge, her face buried in the cushions. I was sure I had killed her.

"Sweetheart," I said, "forgive me."

I put my arms about her, and she answered with a sob.

True enough, I didn't care whether she took any of the blame to herself or not. The clock struck 12. I had been away just ten minutes.

If you keep this medicine on hand, you will never see anything else but smiles on his face. Mrs. S. Blackwell, Okla., writes: "My baby was peevish and fretful. Would not eat and I feared he would die. I used a bottle of White's Cream Vermifuge, and it has not had a sick day since."
